Constructing quality homes to save lifetime costs and create better environments

Sustainable, low-carbon and energy-efficient houses and residential developments can increase sales and rental values, reduce fuel bills and increase the comfort and health of occupants.

But how can housebuilders, developers, architects and contractors ensure they meet demand for new homes while ensuring quality and performance?

This one day conference will examine best practice approaches to cost effectively delivering quality, low carbon, and energy-efficient homes. It will explore the market for 'green' homes and how to bridge the skills gap in the supply chain, to increase efficiency and avoiding the performance gap.
